Disclosure of inside information

As Aarsleff is a company listed on Nasdaq Copenhagen, we are obliged to ensure that we provide the market with timely, reliable, accurate and up-to-date information and that everybody gains equal access to information that may significantly affect the price of the Aarsleff share. This information may be defined as inside information and in that case it will be disclosed as a company announcement. Whether information should be regarded as inside information will be determined by the Executive Management on a case-by-case basis, but the following shows examples of information that may be inside information:

- Contracts where the Aarsleff Group's share of the contract value amounts to at least DKK 1 billion, and we have knowledge that a final contract has been agreed on and approved by all parties. In addition, it may be a requirement that we have received security for our payments either in the form of a down payment or a bank guarantee before publishing a company announcement. In certain cases, a company announcement is published when a client announces an intention to enter into a contract. This may take place if the contract is expected to be of a particularly significant size or of particularly strategic importance, and the probability for signing the final contract is assessed to be high. It will appear from the company announcement if there is a letter of intent which e.g. may be conditional on approaching contract negotiations, implementation of design phase or similar.
- In case of acquisitions when one of the following criteria can be met: The transfer sum is DKK 100 million or more, the acquired revenue is DKK 700 million per year or more, EBIT for the acquired company amounts to more than five percent of Aarsleff's published full-year expectations, or the acquisition is assessed to be of particularly strategic importance.
- In case of adjustment of the full-year expectations, if the adjustment deviates by more than five percent in relation to the most recently published earnings expectations for the financial year.

For a period of four weeks prior to release of the annual reports and interim financial reports, Aarsleff maintains a silent period and will therefore not comment on or discuss any matters related to financial results or expectations.
